Allen Cunningham, a colored teamster, found the papers which had been taken from the safe when Amos Barlow's store was robbed a year and a half ago. He had stopped by the road a half a mile or so from Huntersville on the Beaver Creek road to feed his team. Near was a wreck heap piled by the small creek. Removing a rail a part of the safe filled with papers was found. He immediately took the papers to W. H. Barlow, but every thing was in such bad condition—almost pulp—that nothing was of any value except some shares of bank stock. All the notes and bonds, however, had been replaced by duplicates. The store was robbed April 22, 1908, and some money and watches were secured, besides the loss of many thousands of dollars of notes and securities, deeds and other valuable papers. Until now no trace of the robbers was ever had.

On Wednesday morning at 8:30 o'clock on the lawn of Mr. and Mrs. Brown Trainer, Pocahontas county, W. Bain, of Greenbank, performed the ceremony. The bride looked very beautiful gowned in white mull, carrying ferns. The groom is a popular citizen of Pocahontas county. After a wedding breakfast Mr. and Mrs. Lambert left on their bridal tour for Harrisonburg, Virginia, amid a shower of rice and good wishes.

At the late session the town of Dunlevie played as great a part in furnishing cases for the court as the city of Johnstown furnishes to the county seat of Columbia county. The answer to the question "Where do you live?" was "Dunlevie" and to a stranger to the county, it would have seemed that Dunlevie was a large town and that something had broke loose there. Among the cases tried from that town and vicinity were: Elkins Foundry Co. v Craig & Sons. State v William Gibson. State vs H. A. Hagan 6 cases. State vs Dr. M. E. Gardner 8 cases. County Court vs L. V. Bridge. State vs W. T. Collins.

Along the Old Pike
BUGGY RIDE FROM DURBIN OVER THE ALLEGHANY MOUNTAINS

The following account of a trip over the Alleghany mountains, by way of the old Parkersburg and Staunton Pike, written in a breezy, clever style is by J. H. Knapp, one of the leading business men of Parkersburg, who has been in old Virginia for the past several weeks, in search of health, following a severe attack of illness.

The once famous old Parkersburg and Staunton Pike is much neglected in some of the counties of West Virginia, but such is not the case in Pocahontas county. It is kept in good repair there.

Arriving at Durbin, in that county, the junction point of the Greenbrier Division of the C. & O. railway with the Coal and Iron division of the Western Maryland railroad on Thursday, September 2, at 10:30 a. m., engaged a buggy and driver to start the next morning for a drive over the Alleghany mountains, via the old pike. It was a delightful trip; the road was in splendid condition, the air crisp and the forests were as pretty as could be asked for with their many-colored leaves and trailing vines, all contributing to the make up of the picture. Just a few miles beyond Durbin, we passed Bartow, the site of Camp Bartow of Civil War fame. Next we passed Travelers Rest, and then started up the mountains. Now and then, as we ascended the easy grade, we passed great masses of ferns, and twice stopped to eat ripe blackberries off the vines by the roadside.

The sassafras, dogwoods, gums and maples showed patches of red and yellow, and the pines looked so dark and glossy that one could readily believe each needle had just been varnished.

By and by after many windings, got up where we could look away over the hills and valleys of the surrounding country. To our right (to the south) we could see Droop Mountain and that brought to our minds stories of suffering told by soldiers who took part in battle fought there in the war between the states. A little further on, another band brought us to where we could look away to the left (northward) and there in the distance rose "Spruce Knob," in Pendleton county, the highest point in West Virginia.

After taking a hurried look at the indescribably beautiful landscape we drove on and soon reached the "Top of the Alleghany." There we took a few moments to look over the old fortifications—another grim reminder of the war.

A glance at the watch, and a "goneness" under the vest, showed that dinner time was approaching, and so we drove as fast as we could to Hightown, in Highland county, Virginia, where we got a good dinner, and had a chance to see as pretty a section of bluegrass grazing land as could be found in either of the Virginias. This village of Hightown is in a valley, but at the summit or water shed. The water flowing northwards finds its way into the Potomac while that which goes southward reaches the James.

This good bluegrass land extends several miles north and south from Hightown and the herds of fat cattle, flocks of sheep, good horses, good roads, nice farms with good buildings, constituted a picture of paradise to one who remembered his earlier years on a poor hill farm.

But we were not to tarry here long, even in contemplation of so fine a scene. Bolar Springs was our goal, and it took four hours of driving down the Jackson river valley to reach it.

"Why make Bolar Springs our goal? Because, after wrestling five weeks with a siege of fever and various complications, my physician thought I needed a good quiet place for recuperation, and where I could get the benefit of natural mineral waters which would facilitate the building-up process."

"I hardly know what to say of Bolar. I don't know what the chemical analysis shows in the water but it is a big spring and contains some properties which cure catarrh, and enable one to eat and digest almost any kind of food."

The flow of the water could not be accurately measured with the facilities at my command, but I estimated that the volume of water at approximately one hundred and fifty barrels a minute. Here is how I reached the conclusion. The water flows through a sort of "flume" just below the pool. That "flume" is three feet wide; the water is one foot deep in it; chips, pieces of bark, etc., dropped into it float seven feet in two seconds. So I estimated the volume to be ten and a half cubic feet per second.

"Mountains and forests, here are to be seen on every hand. Literary folk must think of Thackeray and similar poems, but the practical, every day fellow thinks of squirrel hunting and fishing, and he usually acts according to his thoughts—goes out and brings in a bunch of the former or a "string" of the latter.

"One guest has brought in more than sixty squirrels this season, all killed by his own shooting."

"When one comes to think it over, it is not strange that I have gained almost a pound a day for the past two weeks, for the fare has been very tempting, and the effect of the water such that my digestion has been as nearly perfect as possible."

"I cannot imagine a trip in this country which can be made at small expense, which would be more delightful than the drive Durbin to Bolar in fair weather."
